PLUMR

a film by Bradley Silvius

Logline

His sanity waning with every drip, he desperately needed a plumber. But a service call on the wrong app brings an unexpected visitor.

Synopsis

Peter Pickens is not his real name, and this is not his real life. He knows this because he is haunted by dreams of a woman he doesn't recognize and nightmares of water torture. So when he awakens to the incessant dripping of a leaky pipe, his sanity cracks with every drop. His only recourse in the dead of night is an app called Plumr. But Plumr is a hook-up app, and the person who arrives at his door is far from what he imagined, yet may hold the key to his freedom.

Director's Statement

I originally intended for Plumr to be the first in a series of short films featuring Peter Pickens, a former Special Operative who while incredibly gifted, lacked a fundamental element of common sense. Sort of a James Bond with a sprinkle of Pink Panther. Each film would show Peter dealing with a new obstacle (partly of his own making) as he eventually tries to find his way back to his lover in Brasil. As production on Plumr progressed, I realized that I had neither the time, resources or passion for future films in the series. So I re-wrote the script to make Plumr self contained.

With Plumr, I wanted to make a high quality action film on a meager budget while filming in 3 countries. It was my first foray into significant makeup and critical on-set dialogue. I also wanted to experiment with fog and some new camera movement techniques. It turned out to be a much more daunting project than expected (surprise), but the final result was worth the efforts.

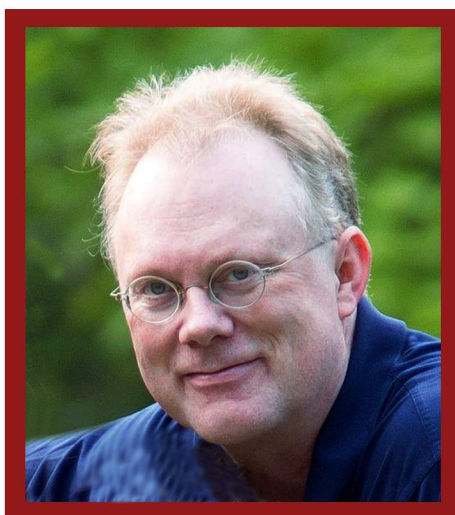

Bradley Silvius Writer/Director

Bradley Silvius wrote his first short story at the age of six and never quit the creative process. He is a published novelist and author of several nationally recognized short stories. He is the writer/director of the award-winning short films, Painting Pilfinger and Pride & Poo, in which he also played the lead roles. Bradley is also the founder of The Little Leaders Company which produces educational videos for toddlers. His short films have garnered awards and Official Selections to numerous film festivals. Bradley has a M.S. in Mechanical Engineering from Rensselaer Polytechnic Institute and holds two US Patents.

Martin Faber Original Score

Martin Faber is a musician, producer and composer. Trained in classical guitar as a youth, Martin played bass and guitar for more than a decade in several pop and jazz bands in his native The Netherlands before playing internationally for more than 30 years. Recently, he has produced several albums for various artists. Martin composed and performed the original score for the short film, Painting Pilfinger, for which he won Best Original Score at the 2015 Made-in-Michigan Film Festival. Martin has a Bachelor's Degree in Aerospace Engineering from the Haarlem Technical University in The Netherlands.

Raquel de Paula Silvius Producer

Raquel de Paula Silvius has been involved in media promotion and production for nearly twenty years. A native of Brazil, Raquel owned and operated a successful language education franchise before coming to the United States to obtain a Masters Degree and Masters Certificate from Eastern Michigan University. She is the producer of the award-winning Little Leaders Video Series, a unique series of programs that expose toddlers to multiple languages and American Sign Language.
